Prophet Muhammad

(Peace be upon him and his household)

Prophet Muhammad (Peace be upon him and his household) was the last messenger sent by Allah to guide people to be kind, truthful, and to worship only one God. He was born in the holy city of Mecca and always showed good manners, even as a child. He cared for the poor, loved children, and treated everyone fairly. Allah chose him to bring the message of Islam, and he taught people about peace, prayer, and helping others. After the Prophet, his cousin and son-in-law Imam Ali (peace be upon him) was chosen by Allah to lead the people. Prophet Muhammad's life is a shining example of kindness, honesty, and love for all.

Prophet Muhammad and the Children

The Prophet Muhammad (peace be upon him and his household) loved children very much. He was so kind that he would play with them, even if he was very important and busy. One day, the Prophet was walking to the mosque to lead the prayer. On the way, he saw some children playing. When the children saw him, they ran to him and said, "Be our camel!"

They wanted to play and pretend that he was a camel. Even though people were waiting for him at the mosque, the Prophet smiled and started playing with the children. He let them climb on him and made them happy.

Bilal, who was waiting at the mosque, saw that the Prophet was late. He came looking for him and saw him playing with the kids. Bilal wanted to send the children away, but the Prophet said, "Making children sad is worse than being late for prayer."

Then the Prophet told Bilal, "Go to my house and bring something for the children." Bilal went and found some walnuts. He brought them back, and the Prophet said to the children, "Will you sell your camel for these walnuts?"

The children were happy and took the walnuts. Then they let the Prophet go to the mosque.
